To students of journalism the name Quill and Scroll holds special significance as being an honor society for those who have given outstanding contributions or service in this particular field. Boone High's Quill and Scroll Club boasts of some 23 members, all of whom take part in the publication of the annual "Scribbles" magazine. The club holds a banquet annually for the initiation of the new members and "exoneration" of the old, thus perpetuating its existence as has been done since its beginning in 1927.

Several honors other than the membership of Quill and Scroll have been bestowed upon some of our own members this year. Our president, Emily Shaler, was also president of the Iowa High School Press Association. James Stumbo received an honorable mention for his sports column writing.
