we are known for...

Lasting memories

"I could hardly wait until Friday night because that meant roller skating parties at Ogden Spinning Wheels. During couple skate I would always had a different boyfriend to skate with," junior Erika Cramer said.

Now that you have your "thinking caps" on, doesn't it seem like it was just yesterday you were having nap time, falling asleep to your favorite childhood book. Or were you the one who couldn't wait for recess to play your favorite game Red Rover.

"When I was in elementary school, I wanted to go home for lunch at my friend's house that was only right across the street. But my mom told me I was too young," junior Tiffany Grider said.

Rules were meant to be broken. In fact, students were often up to some mischief.

"When I was in fifth grade at Trinity we always had chapel in the church every Wednesday morning. So Chad Rasmus and I would wait till everyone was gone and shut off the lights and roll underneath the pews," senior Ryan Jones said.

Along with the school work and hanging out with friends, this was when kids started to fall in love. For some reason boyfriends or girlfriends never seemed to last. Of course why should it last? It wasn't as if students could go out on a date or even sometimes be able to talk on the phone. No matter how difficult it was, they always found a way around the obstacles.

"In fourth grade at recess my friends and I would get our girlfriends and we would go underneath the piano slide. I always got my girlfriend to give me a kiss. Who could blame her?" freshman Josh Smith said.

Elementary school usually meant there was not too much stress. To most, just getting up and going to school wasn't all that serious.

"When I was in the third grade I was looking through a tube with Emily Wiley on the other end. We couldn't figure out what was in it. Until Emily blew through it and a little piece of something came out and hit me in the eye. Good thing I wore glasses," junior Sarah Dotzler said.

Students still wish that school today was that easy. But as times changed and they all grew up, there were always memories in the back of everyone's mind.

•MAKING MEMORIES senior Joy McIntyre and sophomores Kylie Barrett and Brooke Anderson dance. Dances became memories for all ages.

•PLAYING FOOTBALL AS A LITTLE KID is one thing, but sophomore Lucas Wirth finds that loading for the playoffs is much more fun. The team traveled by chartered bus.

High studyin'

Walk down the junior hallway at 8:00 a.m. and you knew when the chemistry classes were having a test. You were lucky if you could make it through the hallway without tripping over a stressed out junior.

Believe it or not cramming was the thing to do, and it just wasn't chemistry. Students crammed for classes ranging from French to physics. The common excuse was that students were too busy or forgot about the test.

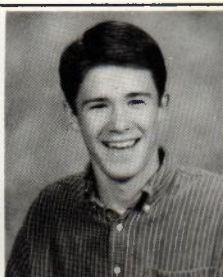

There were many ways to cram for tests. Many students picked the way that worked the best for them. Some students read through everything quickly a couple minutes before class, others tried the memorization method the night before the test.

"I write everything down and study it. It takes a long time, but it works," senior Jessica Thorfinnson said.

Luck had a great deal to do with taking the test. Some believed that luck would be the ticket to passing the exam. Luck ranged from charms to lucky clothes.

"I wear my lucky socks. If my feet are cold I can't concentrate on anything else," junior Sara Lantz said.

There were those who stayed up in the wee hours just for the thrill of taking a test with no hours of sleep. A head full of mumbo jumbo kept some pumping. "I have a big cup of cappuccino from Quik Trip before I start cramming," senior Shawn Brogden said.

we are known for... School stinks

As most people knew, there was a big problem with the constant smell in each hallway. Each day the stench varied in degree. One day it could be the school lunch program and the next someone might have let off a stink bomb.

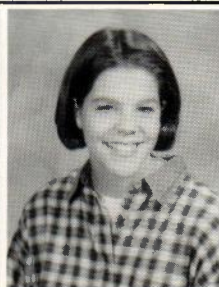

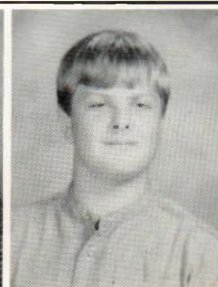

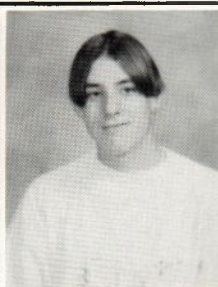

Not only was the smell coming from the student body in some cases but the stench also came from the internal core of the school. The pipes were part of the reason for the smell.

Students complained about the smell, and some even thought that this problem interrupted their education "It makes me gag. The school needs some odor eaters. The smell interrupts my creativity. I can't even think straight with that smell lingering around," senior Asha Rabinowitz said.

The custodial staff was also concerned with the odors. "I've been here twenty-six years and I've never smelled it this bad," custodian Bob Miller said.

Each hallway had a different smell. The 9th grade hallway smelled like stale milk and the 10th grade hallway smelled like a locker room. The 11th grade hallway smelled like perfume which was not too bad compared to some hallways. The 12th grade hallway smelled basically like a big hot furnace.

People knew how to recognize different situations according to the smells. Even though these odors may not have always been pleasant, they certainly will always be remembered.

A unique place

"I looked forward to going in the bathroom after a nice lunch to wash my hands. Then I see a big wad of chew spit," senior Dale Musser said.

Even though the restroom may sound like a boring place to hang out, some pretty interesting things happened there.

"I enjoy catching up on some of the gossip on the stalls and on the bathroom doors. It's also interesting to see who's dating who and who's not getting along," sophomore Natalie Myers said.

"One of the funnier things I saw was when a student had created a comic strip of a few of the teachers having a conversation and plastered it on the mirror," junior Nikki Newbrough said.

Girls sometimes practiced making out with their boyfriends. They used the mirrors after applying a fresh two or three coats of lipstick or lip gloss. They also had to make sure their make-up looked good and their hair didn't look like a ratty bird's nest.

The hand dryers on the wall came in handy. When a student spilled something on clothing and thought it was ruined, those little dryers and cheap soap dispensers came to the rescue.

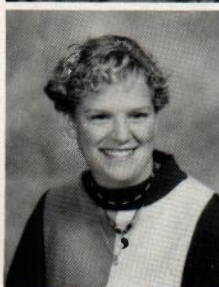

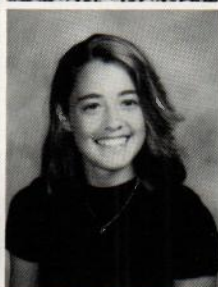

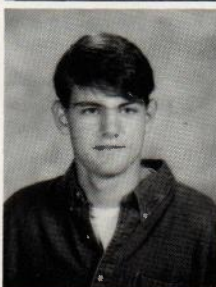

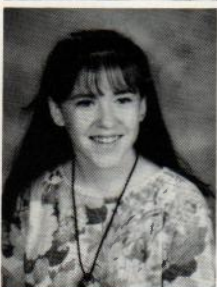

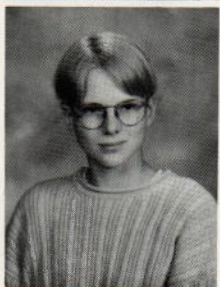

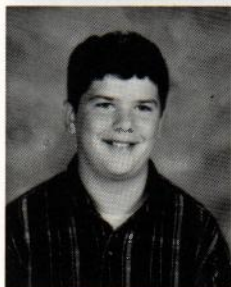

"I had a new white shirt. At lunch a car ran into a puddle and splattered my shirt. After I washed up, that little dryer had my shirt looking brand new," sophomore Lucas Wirth said.

Although there were several restroom purposes, the innovation of the students provided entertainment as well as necessities.

just asking...

Do simulations really work?

There was a new member of the family and your parents didn't even know about it. In the middle of the night the baby cried, waking and giving your parents a heart attack. "Don't be alarmed," you told them, "it's just a class project for school."

"Baby Think It Over" became a new project in the Family and Consumer Science parenting classes. For the project, past or current parenting students "adopted" the battery-operated baby simulators. The class required students to journalize their thoughts, feelings, and problems of caring for a baby at infant age without any help.

"I took the parenting class last year. We had to carry around the flour sacks. I wish that I could've gotten to use these," senior Kari Vickers said.

The baby simulator cried or needed attention every three to five hours. The student inserted a probe into the back. The probe was hooked onto the student's wrist and he/she waited until the baby cried again and then removed the "care probe". Mrs. Betty Hanson, the parenting teacher, checked to see if the babies had been neglected or abused while in the student's care. A red light signified abuse, a yellow light signified neglect.

"The only thing realistic about the babies was that they cried occasionally and you couldn't shake or drop them," senior Ramona Jacobson said.

Over several weekends in the fall and spring, parenting students took the babies home. The students picked them up Friday after school. During the school day Mrs. Hanson served as the daycare provider. During the weekends, some students had to work. Most businesses were very supportive of the project.

"I thought that it was a good learning experience although I felt that one major drawback was that realistically parents don't take their children to work with them, and in our case some of us had to," junior Mollie Conyers said.

Mrs. Hanson said she really appreciated teaching students how hard it really is to be single parents. She wishes she could teach more prospective "dads".

Donations for this project have been received from Ted Schulz, Booth and Grant Dental, Merrill Cottingham, P.E.O. Chapters NO, NP, JL, DD, and Medical Associates.

just asking...

Do you need a job?

Many students had a hard time juggling their schedule between school, extra curricular activities, and jobs. Students, however, weren't the only ones who were struggling with hectic schedules. Many teachers took second jobs in addition to their teaching.

Science teacher, Mr. Mark Camenisch, science teacher, organized intramurals and co-owned B&C Ballcards. Mr. Verlin Potts, art teacher, judged at local horse shows. He also showed and trained horses.

Artistic talents weren't necessary, but several teachers painted houses during the summer. Painters included Mr. Ed Dobelis, Mr. Bud Smith, Mr. John Bachman, Mr. Pete Nelson, and Mr. Dave Chrstensen.

Students had varied opinions about their teachers working overtime. "Teachers shouldn't have second jobs because they can't concentrate on their teaching duties fully. When that happens, the students get ripped off of their education," senior Ryan Caskey said.

"I don't care if teachers have second jobs as long as it doesn't interfere with their teaching abilities," junior Jeremy Rieck said.

"I don't think that it matters because sometimes we all need something to do with extra time. Why not make some money while you're doing it," junior Holly Hurst said.
